Lost

Cassie
>

> On the ground at night I lie
> Staring at the starry sky,
 Trying, trying not to cry--
> A battle fought, a battle lost.
> The crickets chirp, the treefrogs sing,
 A silent barn owl takes to wing;
> I've always loved each living thing--
 For them, what will this battle cost?
>
 A millimeter to the right
> And he would still be here to fight,
 To lead the way, to give us light,
> But he is gone. Is our cause lost?
> <blockquote> Marco
> <blockquote>
 Late last night I heard her crying.
> In her heart, she must be dying.
 I am proud of her for trying

> Even though her life she lost.
> Before the rise of yesterday
 I thought that things would go our way,
> And now I don't know what to say.
 It seems our spirits we have lost.
>

Ax
> <blockquote>
 Years ago I lost my brother
> As my nephew lost his mother.
 Never thought I'd have another

> Prince, and now that Prince I've lost.
> The loud alarms, the flashing lights,
 The dying cries, horrendous sights,

> This isn't like our other fights--
 We have now ultimately lost.

> <blockquote>
> Tobias

>
> We've been walking now all day,
 Wishing memories away.
> They seem to think they have to stay,
 Those memories of battle lost.
> <blockquote>
> Rachel
> <blockquote> I'm strong because I have to be.
 More than ever they need me,
> And I need them more than they see,
 For I have failed, and all is lost.
> <blockquote>
> Jake
>
>>
> I watch them wander from above.
 I look down at the ones I love,

> I look down at that one I love,
 And then I know that all's not lost.

>  Note: I still don't know if this is finished yet. I don't know if it's good or not, but please don't be too hard when you rate it! And BTW, Jake's dead in this poem. I didn't make it too obvious at the beginning, and I think some people were getting confused.
